

THE 621 GALLERY

& The Nan Boynton Memorial Gallery

The 621 Gallery space for changing exhibitions consists of a large room 77' x 30' with a 12' wall dividing the space into two rooms. The building is part of a World War II era lumbermill warehouse. There is an open ceiling, exposing old wooden beams, a metal roof and skylights. Track lighting is attached to suspended steel frames in the front and back gallery. The floors are painted gray cement. The walls are finished sheetrock up to 12' height. The back wall of the gallery has plywood under the sheetrock. The walls are pale gray with the center wall a shade darker. There is 2300 square feet of floor space.

The adjoining Nan Boynton Memorial Gallery provides a smaller exhibition/meeting space approximately 31' x 14' or 400 square ft. The wing also provides a 7' x 14' office, 25' x 14' storage area and a studio space for an artist-in-residence that has its own patio entrance at the back of the building. These rooms have a dropped ceiling 8' - 10' high. The exhibition space in the front has track lighting. Glass doors connect the 621 Gallery space to this Adjunct Gallery.
